SMITH CARRIES TOWNSHIP WITH GAIN OF 751 OVER SUCCESSFUL CANDIDATE

Total Of 2865 Votes Are Cast In Presidential Election In Township Tuesday

With a total of 2,865 votes cast in the presidential election in Washington Township Tuesday, Smith showed a gain of 751 votes over the successful candidate Hoover, the totals being:

HOOVER 1057
SMITH 1808

These figures do not include Warm Springs which did not total votes Tuesday evening for newspaper representatives. With this exception through the co-operation of the Oakland Tribune and the Township Register, Washington Township's returns were reported to Oakland an hour and ten minutes after the polls closed, being the first community in the state to get results in to the Tribune.

Orderliness and quiet accompanied the election in the Township, no disturbance of any sort being reported.

Orderliness and quiet accompanied the election in the township, no disturbance of any sort being reported.

One of the features of the local election was the coincidence noted in one of the precincts of Niles. During the war Mrs. J E Thane was food administor for this section and on a wall of her residence hangs the certificate of her appointment, signed by Herbert Hoover, and Tuesday, ten years later, this same house served as one of the polls where votes were cast to elect the Nation's food administrator, its president.

Numerous radio parties were held Tuesday evening when groups of friends gathered about loud speakers to hear the returns. Added interest was felt in the township's nearness to Hoover's Palo Alto home, when out of the air came the cheers of the Stanford students, the victorious anthems from Souza's band and the plaudits of the several thousands gathered in front of Hoover's residence.

Another freak accomplishment of the radio was noted when today became tomorrow and tomorrow yesterday. At about 10:30, local time, messages came from New York remarking upon the voting which had occurred yesterday, which then to us was still today and Governor Smith's telegram, dated November 7, congratulating Hoover upon his victory, arrived to us a day before it was written, on November 6.

(If one wanted to philosophize, one might remark, that there is no such thing as time even, except as a mat-

DESPERADO THROWS NILES INTO UPROAR

Bullets Fly As Unwelcome Guest Leaves Party; One Man Wounded

"Hey there, Mister, don't go down that way, there's a man shootin' wild and he's liable to git you!"

And that's the greeting a pedestrian got when he started down the main street of our little town early Sunday morning after Otto Kagle had left a party being given by Mr. and Mrs. H. V. Albers at their cottage on First street, returned to his house at the rear of the Albers' lot, equipped himself with a gun and threatened to "shoot up the whole ——— bunch."

And shots rang out; wounded George Richards, reserve traffic officer, in the wrist; and menaced the lives of scores of residents of that section!

Where was the nightwatchman? On duty perhaps, but where? With no central police station, no law enforcement headquarters; no way to get in touch with peace officers over telephone, citizens of this un-incorporated settlement had to hide in their houses, afraid to open doors or windows, or to turn on the light and trust that luck or the gods would aim the bullets some other way.

Surely this incident will serve as an incentive to those who would furnish this community with the means of self-protection. Any town that has to send to another community for peace officers is not protected.

Without reflecting upon the present nightwatchman, Eddie Secada, it might be stated that Niles is without protection. If a circumstance arises whereby more than one is necessary we must send to Centerville or to Pleasanton or to Oakland for peace officers and a moment is often too late when it's a matter of life and death.

Had Kagle known that Niles had an efficient police department that could be reached instantly by telephone, he might not have been so anxious to stage the exciting little party that brought half of Niles to fearful attention in the early hours of Sunday morning.

According to Mrs. Albers, eleven people made up the party at her home Saturday evening. "It was not a booze party," she stated to representatives of The Register Monday. "Of course we had wine but nobody was drunk. Kagle wasn't drunk."

During the evening one of the boys in the party was requested to sing. According to Mrs. Albers Kagle protested and made such a disturbance he was asked to be quiet or leave. During the argument that ensued he referred to women in the party with unmentionable names, according to reports, and one of the men attempted to choke him.

For a moment or two Kagle's life hung in the balance of his necktie. Had it been a four-in-hand, he would perhaps have already breathed his last, but due to the fact that it was a bow fastened to an elastic, he ran through the house and jumped out the kitchen window.

According to the patchwork contrived from various reports, it seems that Kagle returned home for his gun and came back to the front of the Albers' residence waiting for the company to depart.

A near-by resident heard a door slam about two o'clock, loud talking and the voices of two women arguing with a man. A little later three shots were heard. Secada, the nightwatchman, arrived and it is reported Kagle opened fire on him, retreating around

CLARK BRIDGE MAY BE RE-PLACED WITH FILL AND DAM ACROSS CREEK

Opponents Of Incorporation Lose One of Their Best Arguments

SURVEYORS WORKING under George Posey, county engineer, have been working in Niles canyon this past week, investigating the expediency of placing a small dam in the neck of Alameda Creek over which is built the Clarke bridge, thus eliminating the necessity of this structure.

If this plan is found feasible the bridge will be removed instead of re-built and a fill put in its place.

Opponents of incorporation have found in the Clark bridge one of their chief arguments, claiming that the expense of building this new bridge would fall upon the city should Niles incorporate. The Register however, carried notices several months ago, announcing that money had been appropriated by the board of supervisors through the efforts of Ralph Richmond for building the new Richmond Bridge (Stone Bridge) and for re-building of Clark Bridge.

Whether Clark Bridge is re-built or eliminated, will have no effect upon expenses to be borne by Niles should she incorporate.

Niles Chamber of Commerce Aids "Route 40 Club" by Membership

A five dollar membership in the Route 40 Club, composed of public-spiriited citizens of Northern California, Nevada and Utah, was decided upon Tuesday by a unanimous vote of the Niles Chamber of Commerce. The object of this club is to divert tourist travel through the northern gateway to California. In order to do this $300,000 must be raised to meet the federal aid oppropriation necessary to oil and recondition generally the stretch of road between Salt Lake City and Reno The chief of the Motor Vehicle department approximates that 71,000 more non-California cars passed through the southern gateways from May to September of 1928, by way of Yuma and Blythe, than entered this state from northern routes. Figures show that there has actually been a decrease in the travel over the Salt Lake-to-Reno, Route 40 road. Any individual or organization may subscribe and put the road into condition, bringing the eastern tourist through the historic gold rush country to the unmatched roads of our own state.

Election day kept the number at the Niles Chamber of Commerce lunch Tuesday down to small proportions. Most of the time was occupied with the reading of correspondence. A letter from Geo. A. Posey thanked the Niles Chamber of Commerce men for their kind letter of congratulations on his completion of the Alameda-Oakland tube.

A brief resume of the Route 40 Club followed:

This club has been organized and is being directed by outstanding business leaders and public-spirited citizens of Northern California, Nevada and Utah. The club is a non-profit organization and its object is to assist the state of Nevada in raising $300,000, the funds necessary to meet

LOCAL MERCHANT HAS UNUSUAL PRE-ELECTION CALLERS

More traveling salesmen voted in this week's election than any other, probably, according to H. L. Scott, who reported that he had seven or eight callers on Monday, an un-precedented circumstance for the day before election.

"Ordinarily," said Mr. Scott, "traveling salesmen do not call on their customers on the day before election because they want to stay in their respective precincts in order to be able to vote the next day. This year, however, they say that their employers instructed them to vote at all costs, to go about their regular routine and to return to their homes to vote, at the expense of the company.

"They were not told how to vote, but that they must vote at all costs, the concerns by whom they were employed even being willing to pay their return home traveling expenses to bring about a 100 per cent vote."

HOOVER SPECIAL GREETED BY MANY AT NILES MONDAY

Niles turned out most worthily to greet the next president as he passed through via Southern Pacific on the Hoover Special Monday afternoon at five minutes past one, flying flags and cheers testifying to the tribute this community would pay to the favorite candidate.

Most of the delegation gathered beside the track just north of the canyon underpass where they could come within a short distance of the observation platform where Hoover stood smiling and bowing amidst huge baskets of flowers which he had received enroute.

Community Festival Planned For Decoto

A community festival will be held at the Decoto Grammar school on Saturday, Nov. 17, vaudeville stunts and orchestra music to feature the program. There will be a number of booths sponsored by various organizations and the public is requested to patronize this affair, details of which will be announced later.

Employees of the Mutual Store attended the banquet given at the Oakland headquarters Monday evening. About 1700 clerks and managers were present.

COUNTRY CLUB GIVES $10 PER MONTH TO HOME

RE-MODELLING ESTIMATED AT $3,000; NEW CLUB HOUSE WOULD COST $20,000

All Members Urged To Attend Next Month's Meeting When Vote Is To Be Taken Regarding This Matter.

Need of publicity in every form was stressed as the main need of the Children's Home established at Niles under the direction of the Welfare Board of Southern Alameda county, by E. W. Burr, president, before the Country Club of Washington township Tuesday afternoon, which organization voted to give $10 a month for four months toward the up-keep of the home.

"Every traffic officer, constable, station agent, justice of the peace, doctor or any other person likely to come in contact with those needing such service, should know where the Children's Home is and that it is there for the purpose of furnishing a temporary refuge for any young person in distress," said Mr. Burr.

"It is only a temporary home. Foster homes must be found for the children who are taken there but any child who is abandoned, or thrown upon the mercy of the public for any reason may find shelter there until his case is investigated and decided upon."

Mr. Burr stressed the fact that thorough investigations are made before children are placed in former homes. Individual children need different kinds of environment and if fit the child and the child the home. He stated that foster parents are not put to any actual expense in keeping these children as the county gave $20 per month for their keep.

That this sum might be sufficient in a home where there are other children, he pointed out, but in an institution it is hardly enough. Mrs. King, housekeeper of the Children's Home, receives no salary. The $20 per month she receives for each child under her care is all she has for theirs and her food and incidentals. While there are several children this might be sufficient but in case of having only one or two, the amount would be too small to assure any kind of comfort.

For this reason the various organizations of the four townships are being asked to aid with a sum to be given each month until the home is put on an established basis.

"The county should pay for the up-keep of this home," said Mr. Burr, "but so far no appropriation has been made to do so and until this has come to pass it is up to the citizens to take care of this vital need."

But even greater than the financial need is the need to spread the news of this home and the knowledge of its management and the ways it can be used, he said.

Children's Dep't. Has Important Meet

An important meeting of the Children's Department of the Welfare Board of Southern Alameda County was held at the Niles Library Thursday morning with President E. W. MUTUAL STORE HAS NEW ARRANGEMENT

Marked improvement in the service of the local Mutual Store has resulted from the recent change in arrangements and re-building, this being a part of the state-wide program of this organization. Every local Mutual Store has been made to resemble in the matter of arrangement the headquarters department at Oakland.

As goods are taken from the shelves of the main storehouse, they are placed into the trucks in orderly form and from there placed upon the shelves of the local stores in the same order. This simplifies the handling, saves in time and effort and expense, resulting in lower prices to the buyer, and makes it possible for one who habitually buys at a Mutual to go into such a store in any neighborhood and have the same ease of selection he would have in his own home grocery.

This is but one of the many policies the Mutual Store organization is adopting due to the great increase of business they have experienced during the past. Manager Wagner of the local store invites the patronage of the public and every purchaser is guaranteed prompt, efficient and courteous service.

NILES CHAMBER

the federal aid appropriation necessary to oil and recondition the road between Salt Lake City and Reno.

Nevada's population is approximately 75,000 and the sources of income to the state are limited so that the state is unable to raise the necessary amount.

The deplorable condition of the road, which is a part of trancontinental highway No. 40, the shortest route from New York to San Francisco, is directly responsible for the loss of millions of dollars in tourist trade to Northern California annually.

From May 1 to September 30, 1928, approximately 75,000 foreign cars pased through the southern gateways at Yuma, Blythe and The Needles and 4,000 were reported for Northern California.

A prominent Los Angeles business man was asked twenty-five years ago what he considered the most important crop in Southern California. "The tourist crop," he replied. "It is worth $30,000,000 each year to us." The value of this tourist crop has increased in twenty-five years to a value of $150,000,000 annually today. These figures are not surprising when it is an established fact that one tourist who decides to permanently locate in California, can always be counted to bring from three to five additional settlers.

Promoters of the Route 40 Club insist that northern California should be getting a large share of this great business. They believe that the remedy is the reconstruction and oiling of the Salt Lake to Reno, Route 40, road. The support of every individual and [illegible] house in California, Nevada and Utah is needed.

The tourist trade is increasing by leaps and bounds each year. Hardly a line of business fails to feel its influence. Northern California deserves a portion of this trade.

There is beautiful scenery to attract the tourist and unmatched roads in the state. Every foot of the Route 40 Highway from Nevada south passes through the heart of the gold rush sections, and this historic country has a romantic background which appeals to every traveler.

But before tourists will visit, the gap must be bridged. It is up to Californians to help Nevada recondition her main portion of the transcontinental thoroughfare.

It has been reported that it would take Nevada five years to complete the work the Route 40 Club is trying to do in a few months. The need is for memberships at $5 a piece. The club is a non-profit organization and every penny collected will be used to repair the road refered to.

If any local individuals or firms wish to assist in this matter, they may confer with President Harvey Braun of the Niles Chamber of Commerce.

This is a Good Thing to Remember

If there ever is a time when a man longs to operate a powerful broadcasting station, it comes when the doctor says, "It's a boy!" Yes, he would shout just as loud about a baby girl. The point is, he wants to tell the world of his good fortune.

Even if a man could afford a broadcasting station, the baby's mother would subdue his enthusiastic program to more conventional methods.

But nothing can keep him from telling the neighbors. He's got to broadcast the glad news in some way!

That's just where we can be of service. We print and deliver Birth Announcements a few hours after the little citizen arrives. Soon their happy message is in the mails, and loved ones near and far have been permitted to share in the rejoicing.

THIS IS A GOOD THING TO REMEMBER!

Speaking of Strikes

By RING LARDNER

To the Editor:

I made the remark the other day that I wished I was in some sort of a strike and the madam said well why don't you get into one and I said how can I strike when I haven't got no job answer me that which for once she would not.

Well, afterwards I got to thinking it over and finely I seen a way to get into the game that was by organizing a husbands union and demanding a fair trial for the married men. I talked it over with a couple other husbands whom I'm on friendly turns with them and we set down and figured out a set of demands which will first be gave to other husbands for their O. K. and then presented to the wives in the shape of a ultimatum which if each and every demand is not granted the married men will walk out on them the day before Xmas and leave them to explain to the kids why Santa didn't show up.

1. A 20 hour Day and a 6 Day Week.

Under the present system the husband is on the job the whole 24 hrs. of the whole 7 days and even while he is asleep he can't dream nothing that don't remind him of it. The husband wants the hrs. between 8 and 12 every night for rest and recreation, and Sundays to themself for meditation and prayer somewheres away from the home.

2. The Closed Mouth.

The way it is now you don't know sooner get in the house when the owner wants to know where you was. The husband wants the right to not answer.

3. A Increase of at Least 50 Per Cent in Pocket Money.

The owners is getting bigger allowances than ever before but the husbands is still supposed to go along on the old scale though it costs 3 and 5 times as much to mingle around and where a person used to be able to get paralyzed on $10 it now takes $25 and $30 to even feel like you wanted to hear the Rosary.

4. Collective Marketing.

In rare cases, the owner consults the husband as to what would he like for dinner but they generally always wait until just after breakfast when the bare mention of food stuffs rubs the fur the wrong way and even when a husband can remember 1 of his favorite dishes at that hr. in the morning and mentions it out loud why he has his trouble for his pains you might say, as the matter will either be forgotten and hushed up before nightfall or else they tried to get it but the man at the store advised them to pass it up as it was libel to be a little ranced at this time of yr. or something.

In regards to Demand #4, while I don't like to drag in personalities however, I feel strained to say that I have been a husband for better or worse than 8 yrs. and have never kept it a secret from the owner that my 2 favorite viands was oyster cream stew and doughnuts and yet during the entire Eight Years War the no. of messes of doughnuts in our home has hardly ran into double figures of 1 thumb. In the case of the doughnuts it is generally always broughten up that lard is too expensive for lardners or doughnuts don't set good on the kids or the owner don't know if Iola can make them or not and they don't seem to be no way of finding out and if you get them from the bakery you don't know what is in them though personly I don't give a darn as long as they taste greasy and fill you up.

As far as oysters is conserned they's a version in the Psalms that says don't eat them only in months which is spelt with a r and though it goes vs. the grain for a man to speak of their wifes shortcomeings suffices to say that they's many a nice girl that was born a bad speller and just as many that can't bear the looks of a calendar around the house so for all as they know oysters may be at their zenith in July instead of vice versa.

5. The Abolition of the Birthday

The normal husband has as many birthdays per annum as the owner but where as the husband is expected to remember the 10 of July or what ever it is and spend the equal of half a yrs. gold dues where as on the other hand the owner if they don't forget the 6 of March entirely why they buy you a book that until you have read it through you can set around evenings and pare your finger nails

That is the demands as they will be presented to the owners as soon as the husbands can get organized and I hope, dear editor, that you are in sympathy with this movement and will urge all the husbands on your staff as those amongst your subscribers to at once join the Amalgamated Married Men of America and put a end to the humiliations to which a member of the servile sect becomes a party to the minute they are drug up to the harmenial alter and if a walk out is necessary on the date chose which is Xmas eve why I hope the owners will see the light and bow to the inevitable and not try and continue in business with a gang of scabs.

WANTED!

A HOME FOR AN UGLY DUCKLING

When people are selecting foster children they always forget the old story of the ugly duckling that grew to be a swan, according to Mrs. R. W. McCord, executive secretary of the Welfare Board of Southern Alameda county, whose greatest problem at present is finding permanent foster homes for the children who come under her supervision.

Everybody wants a pretty little girl with golden curls and blue eyes, a sweet disposition, irreproachable antecedents, and a skin you love to touch, which is all very well for the lucky little girls with golden curls, but what about the poor mite whose hair is stiff and black, whose skin is dark and suffering from neglect; whose parents are best unmentioned; but whose hearts are just as lonely, whose needs are greater even than the ornamental child's whose very comliness will smooth out some of the rough spots in the road before it.

Anybody can take an attractive, good child, dress it up, supply its healthy body with proper food and have an exhibit to be proud of; but it takes an artist and an angel to make a silk purse out of a pig's ear. There's a challenge in choosing a hard job and all the more joy in accomplishing the self-imposed task.

Not that all the children who come under Mrs. McCord's watchful eye are "pig's ears." Far from it. But the point is, that the attractive children can always be placed even faster than they are found. It's the boy with the gangly lags or the awkward elbows, the loud voice and the bristly hair that goes a-begging.

And yet, it's usually boys of this type that amount to the most in the long run. Of all the persons who have accomplished something for themselves and for others, how few of them have been attractive, well-behaved, children of propitious circumstances.

Most of the famous people of our history have been ugly ducklings who grew to the swan-like state.

There's energy tied up in these riproaring boys—energy and latent possibilities. Needed are guidance and direction, a little love and companionship, teaching and example, association with the better environment, and patience.

Sometimes it occurs to one that foster mothers should have all the requisites advertised for by the Tennessee mountain school board who sought a teacher "with the wisdom of Solomon, the patience of Job and the strength of Samson." But what mother of her own does not need these same?

And in return for the effort spent, there is the pleasure of the companionship of a child, that never-to-be-equalled joy of re-living youth again through the eyes and ears of another boy or girl, a doubled significance of Christmas and other holidays, work of the most fascinating nature ever yet invented—the shaping and molding of a human life.

For the home that needs one child or another child, Mrs. McCord is looking. This home must fit the child as the child must fit the home. If you must have a pretty one, maybe you'll be fortunate enough to get it, or if you can see heart-hunger and need beneath swarthy skins and bristly mops of hair, there are enough to go around.

The county supplies a sum that will take care of the actual food and clothes of the foster child. Medical care is also furnished so that the foster parents do not assume any expense in taking these charges.

These are children who for various reasons have been thrust upon the mercy of the public. The juvenile court has turned them over to Mrs. McCord and it is up to her to find them a home where they can remain until they are of age.

The Children's Home just established at Niles is only a temporary shelter. It can take only six at one time and for that reason foster homes must be found as quickly as possible in order that there may always be room for the emergency case which is likely to arise any day or night.

All persons interested in this matter in any way whatever, should confer with Mrs. McCord at the Health Center in Hayward, or some member of the Children's Department located in the various towns of Washington, Eden, Murray or Pleasanton townships.

Getting off to a three weeks late start, the Kraft Juniors have forfeited three games in the Southern Alameda baseball league. After winning every game so far this season that the club has played, the members feel that they are at a big disadvantage when games must be won by a team which has not even played them. This happened last Sunday morning when the Kraft Juniors arrived twenty minutes late for a game with Berkham and Haluk and the Oakland team refused to play ball. This makes their team the champions on a forfeited game, according to reports given The Register.

The rest of the League games will be played in Niles at the Kraft Ball park, where more substantial support can be expected.

WINGS TO RETURN TO T & D WEEK OF NOVEMBER 10

"Wings," the mighty spectacular picture of the air which has been hailed by critics all over the country as the greatest of all cinema productions, will open a limited engagement at the West Coast T & D theater in Oakland on Saturday, November 10, 1928.

It is the initial engagement of the picture at popular prices, it having recently played in this district at $1.50 admission.

At the T & D theater "Wings" will be screened with the same music and sound effects that were used by the road show company. The whir of propellers, the rat-tat-tat of machine gun fire, the crash of falling planes, will all be heard as well as seen and the music score is played by an orchestra of one hundred musicians.

The cast of stars in "Wings" is headed by Clara Bow, the "It Girl," of the screen with the male leads in the hands of Charles "Buddy" Rogers, the screen's new matinee idol, and Richard Arlen, another young Paramount star.

The management of the T & D theater advises that patrons who can arrange their time will find a better selections of seats and save money by attending the bargain matinees from Monday to Friday inclusive. The doors will open at noon and performances will be continuous daily from noon till midnight with the regular T & D schedule of prices in order.

CHEVROLET

CONSTANT EXPANSION

—to serve Chevrolet owners better

SINCE January 1st more than a million new Chevrolets have been delivered to owners—making the Chevrolet Motor Company, for the second consecutive year, the world's largest builder of automobiles!

This outstanding achievement has been attained not only because of the quality and value of Chevrolet cars—but also because there has been a constant expansion of Chevrolet service facilities.

In order to bring these mammoth facilities of the Chevrolet factories to Chevrolet dealers and owners everywhere, there have been erected 26 huge parts warehouses in the principal centers of distribution. This expansion program is continually going on—for four great additional warehouses will be in operation by January first and seven more by the summer of 1929.

Into the service departments of all Chevrolet dealers, Chevrolet has brought special tools and shop equipment—designed under the supervision of Chevrolet engineers. This equipment definitely assures maximum speed and precision and the lowest possible cost in the performance of every Chevrolet service and repair operation—which are charged for on a flat rate basis.

Furthermore, all of these tremendous facilities have been made available to 15,000 authorized service stations manned by skilled mechanics, over 25,000 of whom have been factory trained to efficiently handle every repair operation on a Chevrolet car. In addition, there are over 4,000 other points where genuine Chevrolet parts may be obtained.

Uniformly efficient, uniformly reliable and within easy reach of everybody everywhere—this great service organization is maintaining at peak efficiency the fine performance for which Chevrolet cars have always been renowned.

We cordially invite you to come in and see how our service facilities reflect the influence of this great national service program.

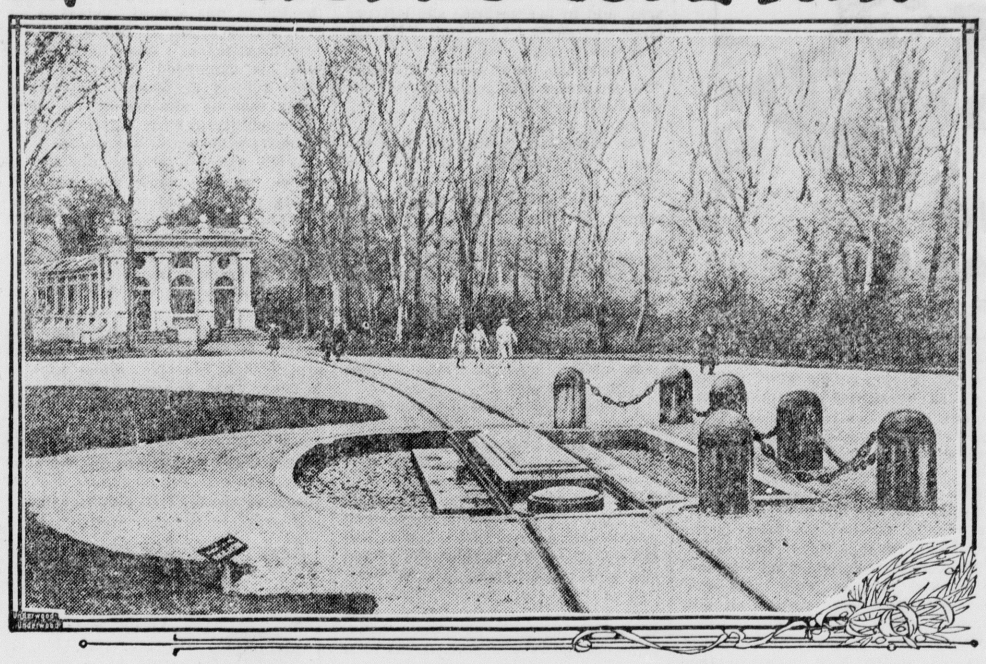
"La Guerre est Fini!"



By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

WASHINGTON, Monday, November 11, 2:48 a. m.—The armistice between Germany, on one hand, and the allied governments and the United States, on the other, has been signed.

The State department announced at 2:45 o'clock this morning that Germany had signed.

The department's announcement at 2:45 o'clock simply said: "The armistice has been signed."

The World war will end this morning at six o'clock, Washington time, eleven o'clock Paris time.

The armistice was signed by the German representatives at midnight.

This announcement was made by the State department at 2:50 o'clock this morning.

The announcement was made verbally by an official of the State department in this form:

"The armistice has been signed. It was signed at five o'clock a. m. Paris time (midnight eastern time) and hostilities will cease at eleven o'clock this morning, Paris time, (six o'clock eastern time)."

The terms of the armistice will not be made public until later.

THUS read the official story sent out by the Associated Press which told of the end of the greatest war in all history. Does it bring back to you that breathless hour one November morning ten years ago when whistles began to blow, bells were rung, firearms barked and a delirium of joy swept over the whole world? In France there was raised a mighty shout of "La guerre est fini!" Across to England and America that cry swept to be transformed into "The war is over! The war is over!" and there followed the most reckless, unrestrained, spectacular celebration ever recorded.

But although the scenes on that day are unforgettable to anyone who took part in the mad riot of rejoicing, how many of us have now, ten years after, any idea of the scene where took place the momentous event which released all that pandemonium of rejoicing? To how many of us does the name of the little railroad station of Rethondes in the forest of Compeigne mean anything more than "just another town in France?" Yet it was here that the Armistice was signed and on this tenth anniversary of that historic event the following account, taken from official sources, of the meeting of the men whose action ended the World war should have particular interest:

The scene was laid in the middle of the forest of Compeigne where Marshal Foch's train drew up opposite some old heavy gun sidings at seven o'clock on the night of Thursday, November 7, 1918.

With Marshal Foch was General Weygand, his chief of staff; some staff officers and British representatives, the latter headed by Admiral Sir Rosslyn Wemyss.

On another set of rails, about a hundred yards away, was another similar train, and on the arrival of the German delegates, in the early hours of Friday morning, after their adventurous journey in automobiles across the fighting front, they were accommodated in this train.

As soon as the German delegates arrived a message was sent them to say that Marshal Foch would be ready to receive them at 9 a. m. the same day, Friday, November 8, and exactly on time, in single file, Herr Erzberger General Von Winterfield (whose father was present at the peace of Versailles in 1871) and Captain Von Vanselow, leading, followed by Count Oberndorff, made their appearance, and in addition there were two officer interpreters.

All of the delegates appeared very downcast and ill at ease, and as soon as they had entered the car fitted for the conference, General Weygand reported to Marshal Foch, who immediately entered together with the British representatives.

THE PLACE WHERE THE ARMISTICE WAS SIGNED

In the foreground is the memorial stone at Rethondes, France, marking the exact spot where stood the railroad car in which Marshal Foch and his staff received the German plenipotentiaries and in which the Armistice, ending the World war, was signed. At the left in the picture is the building in which that car is now housed. It was built with funds given by an American, Arthur H. Fleming of Pasadena, Calif., to provide perpetual shelter for the car and to serve as a museum of the Armistice.

In calm, even tones Marshal Foch asked the Germans, "What is the object of your visit?" Herr Erzberger replied, "We have come to hear proposals for an armistice on land, sea, in the air and in the colonies."

"I have no proposals to make," answered Marshal Foch.

Count Oberndorff then pulled a paper from his pocket and read a statement made by President Wilson concerning the famous fourteen points.

When he had finished Marshal Foch said that if they desired an armistice the terms would be read, and, the German delegates having stated that they wished hostilities to cease, General Weygand read out each article, the French interpreter repeating them in German.

What a dramatic picture this made, perhaps can be imagined.

Herr Erzberger, the son of a postman, with his very full face, large double chin and irregular mustache; Count Oberndorff, who had served all his time in the diplomatic service; General Von Winterfeld, the representative of Prussian militarism, though not aggressively mannered, and Captain Von Vanselow, a naval officer, who, although in uniform, looked more like a merchant.

These, together with their two interpreters, formed one group, and the French and British officers, in their contrasting uniforms, with firm and calm countenances knowing they held the upper hand, opposite.

As soon as the reading of the terms was completed the Germans, looking very dejected, asked permission to communicate with their government. Owing to the fact that the Germans had not brought any cipher, Marshal Foch refused to allow wireless to be used and the terms thus made public properly before perusal and consideration, and so Captain Von Helldorf was dispatched to German headquarters at Spa with a copy.

General Von Winterfeld then asked that hostilities might cease immediately "so as to avoid useless bloodshed," and, speaking in French, he actually referred to the route—"la deroute," the actual word used—of the German army.

Marshal Foch, however, would not agree to giving the enemy any breathing space that might allow them to reorganize, and he stated emphatically that fighting should not cease until the terms read out had been definitely accepted and signed.

Independent discussions were continued during the afternoon in the conference car by the various German delegates, the chief matters necessarily being of a naval and military nature, and during these talks the fearful economic condition of Germany was laid bare.

Besides foodstuffs, necessary material for naval and military equipment was in such short supply that the country was very literally at its last gasp.

Another complaint of the Germans was against both the blockade and blacklist continuing after the armistice was signed, and it was obvious that both these weapons had hard hit their country. However, one of the most important concessions of the whole agreement was then added, namely, that the allies would revictual Germany.

Night fell on that fateful spot in the Compeigne forest and looking out of the train the fires of the bivouacs of the sentries and guards could be seen twinkling merrily, while away in the distance the boom of heavy guns told of the bloody work which was still continuing, after more than four fearful years, and, except for a written paper of agreements, sent over by the Germans, Saturday passed without any visible program, awaiting the message of the German government.

It was suggested that the allies should occupy Helgoland, but the German delegates did not think that it would be necessary.

Another question that arose was the altering of the phrase involving the "surrender" of General Von Lettow Verbeck to "evacuation."

That evening a wireless message was received from the German government ordering the signing of the armistice, but to add that Germany would become a prey to bolshevism unless the allies would undertake provisioning.

There was further long discussion, far into the night, concerning Helgoland, as the French and British felt that there must be something to fall back upon, in case the Germans were unable to control their own men, the majority of whom were almost entirely out of hand.

It was finally decided to add an extra stipulation to the agreement, recommending to the German government that the allies occupy Helgoland if the government should be unable to enforce its commands, as if put in stronger terms a long delay would be occasioned through having to refer the matter to Spa, should the allies insist on the occupation in any event.

At 2 a. m. on Monday, November 11, all the delegates on both sides assembled for a final conference.

General Weygand read out the armistice agreement, article by article, and as each was read out the French interpreter translated it into German, and discussion then proceeded until the final form of the article was mutually agreed upon, though, throughout, the Germans kept insisting that the terms were so harsh they would be difficult of fulfillment.

However, all the articles were finally read and discussed, and then Herr Erzberger stood up and read out a statement in German, stating that the government would carry out the terms as far as humanly possible.

At 5:15 a. m. all the delegates signed the momentous document, Marshal Foch being the first to sign, followed by the British Admiral Wemyss.

Orders were immediately issued, all over the world, for hostilities on land, at sea and in the air to cease at 11 a. m. on that day, Monday, November 11, 1918, for a period of 36 days, and it is now a matter of history how this period was later extended until the peace of Versailles of 1919.

Thus ended the most important historical event of all time.

The Last Salvo

Two minutes before eleven o'clock the last shell shrieked over No Man's Land * * * Hostilities ended with a tremendous crash of American cannon. —Cable Dispatch.

Ghost of Molly Pitcher at Monmouth,
Did you hear that last crash of thunder
Shaking the hills from the Vosges to the Marne,
And the whole world rocking under?
Did you stop as you swabbed the wraith of your gun,
And cooled its hot throat with water,
To hark to the Yanks' good-by to the Hun
Across the red fields of slaughter?

Seventy-five miles of fire and flame,
Volcano and earthquake combining,
Trainloads and shiploads of shot and shell
Roaring and shrieking and whining.
The ground swung round like a weather vane,
And the rivers heaved that were near it—
Oh, ghost of old mad Anthony Wayne
At Stony Point, did you hear it?

Hickory Jackson at New Orleans,
In the sand-bagged trenches kneeling,
Did it knock your cocked hat from your head
When you heard our big guns pealing?
Shaking the skies with their awful din,
Like the fourteen demands of Wilson,
Smashing the window panes in Berlin
And bursting the bungs in Pilsen.

This was the way it came to an end,
Thus was the last word spoken
From the narrow seas to beyond the Rhine,
As the world lay black and broken;
'Twas thus was said good-by to the Huns,
Doomed with their proud commanders,
When the hills were rocked from the Yankee guns,
Over the fields of Flanders.

—John S. McGroarty in the Los Angeles Times.

Preserve Famous Pigeon

Washington.—A request to the War department from Boston that the carrier pigeon, "Cher Ami," which was the only means of communication with the "lost battalion" of the Seventy-seventh division for four days in 1918, be exhibited in the Massachusetts capital, brought a reply that the bird was now among the stuffed trophies on display by the Smithsonian institution.

"Cher Ami" lost an eye and a leg while carrying messages which resulted in relief reaching the "lost battalion," commanded by the late Maj. Charles W. Whittlesey. The bird brought back to the division loft a clear message from Whittlesey which enabled his battalion to be found and rescued after it had been surrounded by Germans.

Pipe Lines

BACK in 1865, in Pennsylvania, an underground transportation system was born. Strange as it may seem, it has continued to grow until today it has about 90,000 miles of line, mainly between the Rocky mountains and the Atlantic ocean, does an unbelievably large and slippery business, operates almost automatically and continuously and yet so quietly that relatively few persons know much about it.

Curiously enough, the petroleum pipe-line system of America, like a railroad, has its main and branch lines, terminals, storage yards, stations, dispatchers, telephone and telegraph systems. Generally speaking, its transporting pipes vary in size from four to twelve inches and mainly are laid underground at varying depths or on river beds. Sometimes they follow their own routes. Their capacity varies according to working conditions. Ordinarily a four-inch line can be counted on to handle about 3,800 and an eight-inch line about 21,000 barrels per day.

Pumping stations, two to ninety miles apart, depending upon local conditions, but generally about forty miles apart, to keep the oil on the move from well to tank, to storage yard, to refinery, to market, as needed. Day and night, week days and Sundays, this gooey fluid that lubricates the nation's machinery moves, incessantly yet silently, on its way. Gauges keep the operating officials advised when leaks or stoppages occur and communicating systems bring the repair gangs who see to it that the service is quickly re-established.

In addition to being a greasy business, pipe-line traffic is chiefly a one-way business—east. Very little of it moves in the reverse direction.

Spanning the St. Lawrence

TIME was when the wonders of the world numbered seven, but that time has gone forever. Today, wonders are numerous. One of them is the giant boulevard of steel which engineers have flung across and high above the waters of the majestic St. Lawrence river and is known to the world as the Quebec bridge.

This structure is peculiar in design in that the central span, 640 feet long and weighing 5,000 tons, hangs suspended between the two end spans at a height of 172 feet above the water, instead of resting upon piers. This middle span was built ashore, floated to mid-stream on scows and then lifted bodily into place and securely fastened. This job went down in history as one of the greatest engineering feats of all time.

Without a sight of the bridge or a photograph of it, it is well nigh impossible for one to form an adequate conception of its tremendous size. One of its caissons goes down more than 100 feet below high water; one pier rises 160 feet above its foundation; the center to center width of the main trusses is 88 feet; the center to center distance between the two main piers is 1,800 feet, and the total length of the steel work 3,239 feet.

Its construction set the owner—the Canadian National railways—back to the tune of about $15,000,000, but it shortened the haul between Halifax and Winnipeg by about 200 miles, and that was far more important.

Mint Farming

ACCORDING to one of Uncle Sam's publications some 17,500 acres of peppermint, including about 2,000 acres of spearmint, are farmed in the United States. Two-thirds of this acreage is in northern Indiana, about one-fourth in southern Michigan—the combined area comprising the largest-known peppermint-producing section in the world, the remainder in Washington, Oregon and New York.

Certain muck and peat soils seem best adapted to this culture. Planted in rows, harrowed when young and later weeded by hand, it is harvested with mowing machines. Harvest time ranges from late July to early September, according to weather and crop conditions. Two to three tons of herb per acre is an average yield. The hay is distilled in vats—about 325 pounds of hay producing a pound of oil. One traveling through a mint-farming section during harvesting time will note that the country round about it is permeated by a noticeably sweetish odor.

The oil brings the money. It is sold by the pound. The yield may range from next to nothing to 100 pounds per acre—the average being from 25 to 75 pounds. The price may fluctuate from $1 per pound in over-supply seasons to $25 per pound in short-crop seasons—the general average being about $2.50 per pound.

Formerly, certain quantities of juicy mint leaves were used in making a very celebrated concoction rather widely and fondly known as mint julep. Today, the oil is chiefly used in flavoring extracts, medicines and cosmetics. Such of the crop as is exported normally goes to England, Germany and France.

If Kidneys Act Bad Take Salts

Says Backache Often Means You Have Not Been Drinking Enough Water

When you wake up with backache and dull misery in the kidney region it may mean you have been eating foods which create acids, says a well-known authority. An excess of such acids overworks the kidneys in their effort to filter it from the blood and they become sort of paralyzed and loggy. When your kidneys get sluggish and clog you must relieve them, like you relieve your bowels, removing all the body's urinous waste, else you have backache, sick headache, dizzy spells; your stomach sours, tongue is coated and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment, channels often get sore, water scalds and you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night.

Either consult a good, reliable physician at once or get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize acids in the system, so they no longer irritate, thus often relieving bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, cannot injure and makes a delightful, effervescent lithia-water drink. Drink lots of good water.

SAME PRESCRIPTION
HE WROTE IN 1892

When Dr. Caldwell started to practice medicine, back in 1875, the needs for a laxative were not as great as today. People lived normal lives, ate plain, wholesome food, and got plenty of fresh air. But even that early there were drastic physics and purges for the relief of constipation which Dr. Caldwell did not believe were good for human beings.

The prescription for constipation that he used early in his practice, and which he put in drug stores in 1892 under the name of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is a liquid vegetable remedy, intended for women, children and elderly people, and they need just such a mild, safe bowel stimulant.

This prescription has proven its worth and is now the largest selling liquid laxative. It has won the confidence of people who needed it to get relief from headaches, biliousness, flatulence, indigestion, loss of appetite and sleep, bad breath, dyspepsia, colds, fevers. Automobile drivers of Australia are tired of climbing in and out of their cars in order to open and close road gates to keep cattle at home. THE SETTLING OF THE SAGE

WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE

At the Warren ranch, the "Three Bar," on the fringe of the "cow country," a stranger applied for work as a rider. Williamette Ann Warren—known to all as "Billie," is the owner of the ranch. The girl's father, Cal Warren, had been the original owner. The question whether the territory is to remain "cow country" or be opened to settlement is a troublesome one. The newcomer is put to work. Cattle "rustlers" have been troubling the ranch owners. The new hand gives his name as Cal Harris. By his announcement in favor of "squatters" he incurs the enmity of a rider known as Morrow. The will made by Cal Warren stipulated that half the property should go to the son of his old friend, William Harris, under certain conditions. The new arrival is the man, and he discloses the fact to Billie. The girl is suspicious. Slade, a ranchman with an unsavory reputation as a "bad man," visits Billie. He has long wanted to marry her, but she dislikes and fears him.

He stood so close as almost to touch her but she failed to lift a hand or move back an inch, and Slade knew that he faced one whose spirit matched his own, perhaps the one person within a hundred miles who did not fear him. He had tamed men and horses—and women; he raised his arms slowly, deliberately, to see if she would flinch away or stand fast and outgame him. She knew that he was harmless to her—and he knew it. He might perpetrate almost any crime on the calendar and come clear; but in this land where women were few they were honored. One whisper from the Three Bar girl that Slade had raised his hand against her and, powerful as he was, the hunt for him would be on, with every man's hand against him.

His arms had half circled her when he whirled, catlike, every faculty cool and alert, as a voice sounded from the door. Both had been too engrossed to notice its noiseless opening.

"I've finished cleaning up round the shop and corrals," Harris said. "Is there any rubbish round the house you'd like to have throwed out and piled in a dry gulch somewheres out of sight?"

He stood in the door, half facing them, his left side quartering toward Slade. To the girl it appeared that the strange pose was for the purpose of enabling him to take a quick step to the right and spring outside if Slade should make a move and she felt a tinge of scorn at his precaution even though she knew that it would avail him nothing if Slade's deadly temper were roused by the insult. Slade, who had killed many, would add Harris to his list before he could move.

Slade's understanding of the quartering position and the odd sling of Harris' gun was entirely different and as he shifted his feet until he faced the man in the door, his movements were slow and deliberate, nothing that could be misconstrued.

"Who summoned you in here?" he demanded.

Harris did not reply but stood waiting for some word from the girl. She had a sudden sick dread that Slade would kill him and was surprised at the sentiment, for no longer than an hour before she had wished him dead. She made belated answer to his original question.

"No," she said. "Go on out, please."

He turned his back on Slade and went out.

"And you," she said to Slade, "you'd best be going too. We've been too good neighbors to quarrel—unless you come over again with the same idea you did today."

At sunset the girl called to Harris and he repaired to the house and found her putting a hot meal for two on the end of the long pine table, the first time she had deigned to eat with him.

"There's no use of our going on like this," she said. "We've two years of it to face; so it's best to get on some kind of a neutral footing."

For her own peace of mind she had tried to smother her dislike of him and he was very careful to avoid any topic that would rekindle it. They washed the dishes together, and from that hour their relations, to all outward appearance, were friendly or at least devoid of open hostility. But he knew that she was merely struggling to make the best of a matter that was distasteful, that her opinion of him was unaltered. Her bitterness could not be entirely concealed, and she frequently touched on some fresh point that added to her distrust of his present motives and confirmed her belief in his double-dealing in the past. There were so many of these points; his refusal to accept her offer to give him his half-interest if he would stay off the place; his weak insinuations that there was some reason why he must spend two years on the Three Bar; his prowling the country for a year spying on the methods she followed in running the outfit, half of which would soon be his; his buying the school section and filing on a quarter of land, the location blocking the lower end of the Three Bar valley. Whenever she mentioned one of these he refused to take issue with her. And one night she touched on still another point.

"What was the reason for your first idea—of coming here under another name?" she demanded.

"I thought maybe others knew I'd been left a part interest," he said.

She Knew That He Was Harmless to Her.

"and it might be embarrassing. The way it is, with only the two of us knowing the inside, I can stay on as a regular hand until the time is up."

"You're so plausible," she said. "You put it as a favor to me. Did it ever strike you that if the truth were known it might also be uncomfortable for you?"

He smiled across at her and once more she frowned as she discovered that he was likable for all his underhandedness.

"Worse than that—suicidal," he admitted. "If you mentioned what you think of me, that I've framed to rob you by law, you wouldn't be bothered with me for long." He laughed softly and stretched his feet toward the fire. "Look at it any way you like and I'm in bad shape to deal you any misery," he pointed out. "If you'd drop a hint that I'm an unwelcome addition it would only be a matter of days until I'd fail to show up for meals. If you view it from that angle you can see I'm setting on the powder can."

She did see it, but had not so clearly realized it till he pointed it out, and for the first time she wavered in her conviction that he had come simply to deprive her of her rights. But the thought that her father would not easily have willed away the home place to another without being unduly influenced served to reinstate her distrust along with a vague resentment for his having shaken it by throwing himself so openly on her mercy.

"You probably thought to overcome that by reaching the point the whole thing so patently aims for," she said. "And you calculated well—arriving at a time when we'd be alone for a week. The whole scheme was based on that idea and I've been patiently wondering why you don't rush matters and invite me to marry you."

He rose and flicked the ash from his cigarette into the fireplace.

"I do invite you—right now," he said, and in her surprise she left her chair and stood facing him. "I'd like real well to have you, Billie."

"That's the final proof," she said. "I'm surprised that you didn't tell me the first day."

"So am I," he said.

She found no answer for this but stood silent, knowing that she had suddenly become afraid of him.

"And that's the living truth," he affirmed. "Other men have loved you the first day. You know men well enough to be certain that I wouldn't be tied to one woman for the sake of owning a few head of cows—not if I didn't want her for herself." He waved an arm toward the door. "There's millions of miles of sage just outside," he said. "And millions of cows—and girls."

He moved across to her and stood almost touching her, looking down into her face. When Slade had stood so a few days past she had been coldly indifferent except for a shiver of distaste at the thought of his touching her. Before Harris she felt a weakening, a need of support, and she leaned back from him and placed one hand behind her on the table.

"You judge for yourself whether a man wouldn't be right foolish—with all those things I mentioned being right outside to call him—to marry a woman he didn't want for herself, because she had a few hundred head of cows." He smiled down at her. "Don't pull back from me, Billie; I won't lay a finger on you. But now do you think it's you I want—or the little old Three Bar?"

"You can prove it," she said at last. "Prove it by going away for six months—or three."

He shook his head.

"Not that," he said. "I've told you I was sewed up in a right peculiar way myself—which wouldn't matter a d—n if it wasn't for this. I'd have tossed it off in a second if the girl on the Three Bar had turned out to be any other than you. Now I'm going to see it through. The Three Bar is going under—the brand both our folks helped to found—unless some one pulls it out of the hole. Believe me if you can and if you can't—why, you know that one remark about my being unwelcome here will clear the road for you, like I mentioned a few minutes back."

He turned away without touching her and she had not moved when the door closed behind him.

An hour past noon on the following day a drove of horses appeared at the lower extremity of the valley and swept on toward the ranch. As Harris threw open the gates of the big corral he saw her standing in the door of the cookhouse watching the oncoming drove. Riders flanked the bunch well out to each side to steady it. There was a roar of hoofs and a stifling cloud of dust as three hundred half-wild horses clattered past and crowded through the gates, scattering swiftly across the pasture lot back of the corral. A dozen sweat-streaked riders swung from their saddles. There was no chance to distinguish color or kind among them through the dust caked in the week-old growth of beard that covered every face.

One man remained on his mount and followed the horses into the pasture lot, cutting out fifty or more and heading them back into the corral; for Waddles had decreed that they could have the rest of the afternoon off for a jaunt to Brill's store and they waited only to change mounts before the start.

Calico stood drooping sleepily in one of the smaller corrals and Harris moved toward him, intending to ride over with the rest of the men.

"The boss said for you to ride Blue," Morrow stated as Harris passed the group at the gates of the corral. "He's clear gentle-broke, Blue is."

The men looked up in surprise. Morrow had not been near the house to receive instructions from the girl. The lie had been so apparent as to constitute a direct challenge to the other man.

Harris stood looking at him, then shrugged his shoulders.

"Whatever the boss says goes with me," he returned evenly.

A rangy blue roan swept past with the fifty or so others. At least once every round of the corral he laid back his ears and squealed as he scored some other horse with his teeth, then lashed out with wicked heels.

Druggists With "Side Lines" Nothing New

The druggist who sells lunches, books, radio sets and fishing tackle isn't a modern phenomenon at all, as most of us believe.

Around 1600 to 1625 we find the pharmacist selling sweets, preserved fruits, brown paper plasters, hair powders and perfumes. In 1617, in England, a new charter separated the apothecary from the grocer and he began to concentrate more upon drugs and to dispense.

At a later date apothecaries virtually became physicians. They prescribed as well as dispensed and visited patients. The pharmacist was then practically a fully qualified practitioner.

But gradually he had fewer and fewer drugs to dispense as prescribed. Today a city will often support only a few exclusive pharmacies and the druggist has fallen back upon side lines, quite as in the early days. This is no new and riotous indulgence on his part; he has ample respectable precedent.—T. Swann Harding in the American Druggist Magazine.

Great Orators Among Red Men of America

Standing erect, with eyes flaming with enthusiastic ardor, and a mind laboring under an agony of thought, the Indian was a most impressive orator, writes Elijah M. Haines in "The American Indian." When he spoke before his assembled nation on some great subject he showed most manifestly that he was feeling an awful responsibility in what he attempted to advocate in behalf of his people.

Caleb Atwater, one of the United States commissioners who made a treaty with various Indian tribes for the purchase of large tracts of Illinois and Wisconsin in August, 1829, said the Indian's oratorical presence was the finest to be seen. "His eloquence abounds with figures from every subject which nature presents to his eye. When he touches upon the subject of the sale of his country his eye flashes fire, his whole soul is in every word, in every look, in every gesture. He raises himself on his feet, his body is thrown in every attitude, every muscle and nerve being strained to its utmost power. His voice is loud, clear, distinct, commanding. He becomes, to use his own phrase, a man."

Los Angeles Boy Needed Help

Leroy Young, 1116 Georgia St., Los Angeles, is a "regular fellow," active in sports, and at the top in his classes at school. To look at him now, you'd think he never had a day's sickness but his mother says: "When Leroy was just a little fellow, we found his stomach and bowels were weak. He kept suffering from constipation. Nothing he ate agreed with him. He was fretful, feverish and puny.

"When we started giving him California Fig Syrup his condition improved quickly. His constipation and biliousness stopped and he has had no more trouble of that kind. I have since used California Fig Syrup with him for colds and upset spells. He likes it because it tastes so good and I like it because it helps him so wonderfully!"

California Fig Syrup has been the trusted standby of mothers for over 50 years. Leading physicians recommend it. It is purely vegetable and works with Nature to regulate, tone and strengthen the stomach and bowels of children so they get full nourishment from their food and waste is eliminated in a normal way.

Four million bottles used a year shows how mothers depend on it. Always look for the word "California" on the carton to be sure of getting the genuine.

COUNTRY CLUB TO CONSIDER MATTER OF NEW BUILDING AT NEXT MEETING

Following a report from the building committee, the Country Club of Washington Township voted at the meeting Tuesday to postpone action until the December session of the club as to whether the organization would spend approximately $3,000 for remodelling the present building or from $15,000 to $20,000 for a better building in a different location.

Inasmuch as there were only about thirty present it was deemed unfair to make a decision upon so important a matter at that time. Mrs. Roland Bendel, chairman of the building committee, promised to have mimeographed copies of the suggested floor plan for remodelling the present club house along with the important items of her report, mailed to each member of the club before the next meeting in order that each could vote intelligently after due consideration of the facts in the case.

Remodelling plans would call for an enlargement of the vestibule, installation of a men's dressing room, a sixteen-foot stage, fourteen feet added to the main room, installation of a stove and flu, painting of exterior of building and arrangements for parking fifteen or twenty cars on the rear of the lot. It was also suggested that additional property might be purchased at the rear to provide more parking space.

It was reported that considering the fact that purchasers of the building who would make it into a dwelling would have to spend a large sum upon it, not more than $5,000 could be expected as sale price, this sum to come in small payments.

The present building is in splendid condition, contractors consulted, said. The roof is good for at least another five years. In the opinion of a number of business men throughout the township, another structure in a better location, the same size and quality as the present building could not be erected for less than $10,000. A building bigger and better than the present one would cost from $15,000 to $20,000.

It was stated that with money on hand, a loan for the remainder of the $3,000 remodelling fee could be arranged for at the bank but that it would not be possible to borrow as much as $20,000 without more security, which would mean that five or six thousand of this amount would have to be arranged by private subscriptions from the club members.

There was some discussion of calling a special meeting for deciding this matter but Mrs Fleda Bunting brought out the fact that each member after receipt of the report from Mrs. Bendel would have an opportuntiy to make up her own mind and that it should not take long to cast the vote.

Every member is urged to make a special effort to be present at the meeting in November when this matter is to be decided. Mrs. Mary Allen, parliamentarian, suggested that in case it is absolutely impossible to be present a proxy vote be sent, signed in the presence of witnesses, to the secretary of the club to be cast by her at the election.

Mrs. Howard Chadbourne reported on the district meeting held recently at the Mt. Diablo club with Mrs. Wm. Lauchland, district president, presiding. Mrs Robie, Mrs. May and Mrs. Brown were other members who attended.

The program consisted of a talk by E. W. Burr, president of the Children's Department of the Welfare Board, as reported in another column of this issue.

"DESERT SONG" AT CURRAN THEATER AGAIN THIS WEEK

After forty-five continuous weeks in California, "The Desert Song" will return to the Curran Theater, San Francisco, Monday night, November 12th, for a brief engagement.

Seldom in the annals of the theatrical business has a stage vehicle taken such a decided hold on the affections of the public as this, the greatest of all Romberg's Operettas which packed the Curran theater to the doors for eleven consecutive weeks not so long ago.

The forthcoming presentation will be that of the original company with Perry Askam and Elvira Tanzi, the original singing stars, at its head, and with the same organization of 100 golden voices.

The beauty of the Romberg score is the main reason for "The Desert Song's" popularity, although the book has a great appeal. It stirs the heart of anyone who still has a breath of romance in his veins. Possibly the pronoun "her" would be more appropriate than "his" because feminine theater goers have been pouring out for the production in large numbers. It is just the kind of story impressionable women love.

Cecil Stewart, who occupies a peculiar niche in the musical world, will conduct the augmented symphony orchestra during its return engagement.

For the benefit of out of town patrons mail orders will be accepted. The prices are, every night 75c to $2.50 with the exception of Saturday night. On Saturday night the prices are 75c to $3.00. The matinees on Wednesday and Saturday are 50c to $2.00.

"Good News" the collegiate musical comedy hit ends its engagement at the Curran Saturday, November 10th.

Mrs. Leon Solon, Mrs. A M. Alves, Mrs. William Garcia, Mrs. Ed Rose and Mrs. Fred Rose will assist Mrs. Ellen Habenicht in serving the Parent-Teachers Association benefit luncheon at her home next Tuesday.

A Dollar Dinner For Four

MICHAEL ARLEN says that economy hath charms, but not to the eye. However, this dinner for four people, which can be prepared for a dollar, is beautiful to look upon as well as to eat, for the color combinations are chosen with care.

The chicken and rice broth may be bought canned and served with a paper-thin slice of green pepper in each soup bowl — for beauty.

To make the fritters, sift one cup flour with one teaspoon salt and one teaspoon baking powder. Mix with contents of one can of Country Gentleman corn, add one cup minced picnic ham and two well beaten egg volks. Fold in two stiffly beaten egg whites. Heat about half an inch of fat in the skillet and when a piece of bread will brown in the fat in one minute drop the fritters from a tablespoon and cook until brown. Drain and serve sprinkled with minced parsley.

Boil the carrots and peas separately, or use canned ones. Toss them together and butter them, seasoning well.

In making peach junket put a cup of sliced peaches in a serving dish. Dissolve one-half junket tablet in two teaspoons cold water. Heat one cup milk, add one tablespoon sugar and stir until dissolved. Add one cup cold milk and, when milk is cooler than luke-warm, add junket tablet. Set in a warm place, until of the consistency of jelly, then pour over peaches. One-half this recipe is sufficient for four.

Prices are: broth, 10 cents; fritters, 43 cents; peas and onions, 20 cents; peach junket (one-half of recipe), 11 cents; lemon wafers, 5 cents; coffee, 5 cents; total, 94 cents. The extra 6 cents will allow for sundries.

DESPERADO THROWS

Firing again, a bullet from Kagle's gun pierced the plate glass window of the post office and flattened itself against a steel partition inside.

A little later the deputies from Pleasanton arrived, Deputies L. E. VanPatten and H. Radbush. Kagle had emptied his gun and retreated to his house. Tear bombs were thrown into his residence but were thrown back out as quickly as they went in.

Wakened by the noise, George Richards, reserve traffic officer, appeared upon the scene and went up on top of the theater building to act as watchman and attempt to stop Kagle if he came out of the house again. A little later when the desperado appeared, Richards commanded him to halt and in reply Kagle turned his gun skyward and shot Richards through the wrist.

"Here he comes," somebody howled, as a figure came lurching through the crowd collected in front of the theater. They scattered in all directions but the man proved to be the wounded Richards who went to his car to get a double-barrelled shot gun. The crowd, re-assured, returned just in time to have Richards accidentally discharge his gun, scattering the people in terror once more.

Barricaded once more in his house Kagle refused to come out when invited to by officers. At last, a man by the name of Day who is working on one of the canyon bridges persuaded Kagle that the most sensible thing to do was to come out and submit to arest. Constables Silva and Bernardo had arrived during the fracas and Silva put the handcuffs on just as Shurtliff, Davis and Collier from the seriff's office in Oakland arrived to take the prisoner to the county jail.

A neighbor reported that Mrs. Kagle, who was in the house with her husband during the time he was barricaded there, declared after the excitement that "this wouldn't have been even noticed in Chicago!"

According to Nightwatchman Secada, charges of attempt to murder will be placed against Kagle.

Mr. and Mrs. Kagle have been occupying the house on the rear of the Albers' lot since September. He has been employed at one of the local tile factories.

The first disturbance started between one and two o'clock and continued until Kagle departed with the sheriffs to Oakland a little after 6 o'clock.
